

The History of the St. Louis Artists' Guild

Since 1886, the St. Louis Artists' Guild has been the regional center for artists and art lovers. Today the Artists' Guild is an extraordinary organization with approximately 800 members.

The history of the Artists' Guild is the history of art in St. Louis. For over a century, most professional artists in St. Louis achieved their first recognition through its competitive exhibitions.

The Artists' Guild has consistently been a significant contributor to the cultural environment of the greater St. Louis area. In 1995, its move to a beautifully restored 1920's mansion in the heart of Oak Knoll Park in Clayton provided the perfect place to expand programs, classes, workshops and exhibitions.

Exhibition Opportunities

The Artists' Guild holds national, regional and local competitions with cash awards. It also hosts national exhibitions and participates in collaborative and exchange exhibitions with other art organizations. In addition, the Artists' Guild holds an annual exhibition for young artists which features cash awards and scholarships.

As a well-established network for artists in the metropolitan area, the Artists' Guild is an organization in which artists can learn, share ideas and their love for art among peers and professionals.

Whatever one's interests or skills, the St. Louis Artists' Guild has a workshop or program for you. In addition, the Guild holds demonstrations, weekly art groups, lectures and book signings.

Members

Members of the St. Louis Artists' Guild are a unique blend of professional and commercial artists, established and emerging artists, architects, photographers, educators, students and art lovers. Through the dedication of its members and volunteers the Artists' Guild is able to offer exhibitions, programs and activities that make it a valuable asset to the St. Louis community.

A Proud Past

Distinguished and well-known artists have been with the St. Louis Artists' Guild throughout its history. Past member and exhibition lists read like a "Who's Who of American Art."

As a non-profit organization, the St. Louis Artists' Guild depends on memberships, fundraising activities, generous support from the community and grants from the Arts and Education Council, Regional Arts Commission, Missouri Arts Council and Angels of the Arts.
